Synthesis and Analysis of New Electrode Material for Energy Storage

Takashi Nishikawa (PI)
Adilson E. Motter (co-PI)
Slava Tsirelnikov (collaborator)
Luciana Zanella (collaborator)
Synthesis and Analysis of New Electrode Material for Energy Storage

- The goal of this project is to search for a new electrode material for lithium-ion batteries used for energy storage.
- The project builds on the observation that certain materials with layered crystal structure can store energy by being reversibly intercalated with lithium ions.
- The expected outcomes include Li-cells with improved electrochemical properties.

Basic structure of the proposed class of new electrode materials.