Graphene oxide:single walled carbon nanotube thin films are found to be very effective hole transporting layers for polymer solar cells, report Jiaxing Huang and co-workers. The high red/infrared transparency and solution process ability should make the composite an attractive interfacial layer material for high-performance polymer solar cells using low bandgap polymers.